

RULES FIRST

The game for football officials. NCAA rules

In the board game "RULES FIRST" officials of American football compete in their ability to answer rules questions, collect points and their ability to use the tactical and strategic aspects of the game.

The players are challenged by 400 rules questions divided into two categories from beginner to expert, so that officials of all levels can play. The questions vary greatly from traditional play situations, to questions about which rule deals with which situations to the player having to give the right signal to answer the question correctly. There are also questions that force the players to look at the rules from a completely different angle.

The tactical and strategic aspects in the game make it fun to play over and over again. Pre-snap cards provide unpredictability keep the game close right to the end.

For fun and serious training

The game is perfectly suited as a training tool in the off-season, during the pre-game, having fun with your fellow officials, and during clinics, seminars and workshops.

The Rules Expertise

RULES FIRST is developed in cooperation with the experienced official Frank Kristensen. Since 1991 Frank has officiated more than 500 Danish and international games, including European and World Cup Finals, college game in the US and been involved in the NFL Europe. Every year Frank trains top officials all over Europe. The game has been tested in Denmark and in the US and officials from around the world have helped quality check the questions.
